

End of Management Games / Lectures

Author : admin

Today was the last day of the lectures with Joop Vinke. Here is how my day passed. I woke up at 9:00, washed my teeth dressed combed my hair and went to the police station to look for our quarter police officer. I need to renew my personal ID card because it has been expired already for 4 years already. Thanks God everything went smoothly in the police station. After that I went to school we had lectures with Joop Vinke. After the school I went home and played around with my FreeBSD system. I succesfully upgraded gnome 2.20 to 2.22.

Using the binary packages from

<http://www.marcuscom.com/tb/packages/7-STABLE-FreeBSD/gnome/>. I'm trying to upgrade gnome from source for already almost 3 weeks with portmanager. After all of the required ports rebuilt still gnome wasn't functioning, so in order to make it working I downloaded packages from <http://www.marcuscom.com/tb/packages/7-STABLE-FreeBSD/gnome/> and ran a little loop with

for i in *; do pkg_add -vf $i; done

to make all the .tbz files install I did that yesterday night today at the afternoon everything was installed and gnome ran just fine I only had to link few libraries because they were searched on a different places. All works just fine now I only have to rebuild few of my games because they're now linked to an old libraries. In the evening we went out with Javor for a coffee. As very often we went to the fountain we had a nice talk and then we went to his apartment to watch a film. He recommended a film called 1984 and we watched that. My impression is that this film is totally psychodelic and freaky, but still interesting to see. After I went home I went to see my grandma and now I'm home tired on a few steps of my bed :) I should also mention that today I upgraded clamav on 3 of the servers I maintain. It seems there are few configuration options which changed in the new clamav release (0.93). It was an easy day as a whole if we don't count my physical infirmity.
